IPSC AQUATICS

The water may have settled, but the excitement certainly hadn't. As the All India IPSC Aquatic Championship for Girls drew to a close, the closing ceremony celebrated four days of relentless determination, unforgettable performances, and the kind of sportsmanship that deserves a standing ovation. The medals glittered, the applause thundered, and the smiles said the rest. It was the perfect finish to four days of competition that were as inspiring as they were unforgettable. One final round of applause later, the championship came to an end—but the stories, friendships, and "remember when..." moments had only just begun.

INK AND INTRIGUE

A sports camp recap that somehow involved more food, FIFA and screen time than actual sport.

A few Jindalites returned to campus for their IPSCs and their not-so-happening CBSEs, which, if we're being honest, felt suspiciously like a scam. Luckily, the Dining Hall seemed determined to make up for it with pancakes and whipped cream, paneer parathas and an A LOT of mangoes. At some point, we genuinely began questioning why the rest of the school even needed to come back. Food simply hits different when there isn't a queue of 200 people ahead of you.

The camp also brought with it some questionable fashion choices. Crocs appeared in places where Crocs had absolutely no business being, civvies casually wandered into uniform territory, and Lock Upp was watched with enough dedication to make our seven-hour screen time look almost justified. Almost.

Meanwhile, things were considerably more serious on the field. VDJS came out victorious in U17 Hockey IPSC for the fourth consecutive year, while the school hosted a whopping 350+ students. So many, in fact, that our poor footballers had to set up temporary headquarters in the Savitri House common room. At that point, "sports camp" was beginning to feel more like a full-scale occupation.

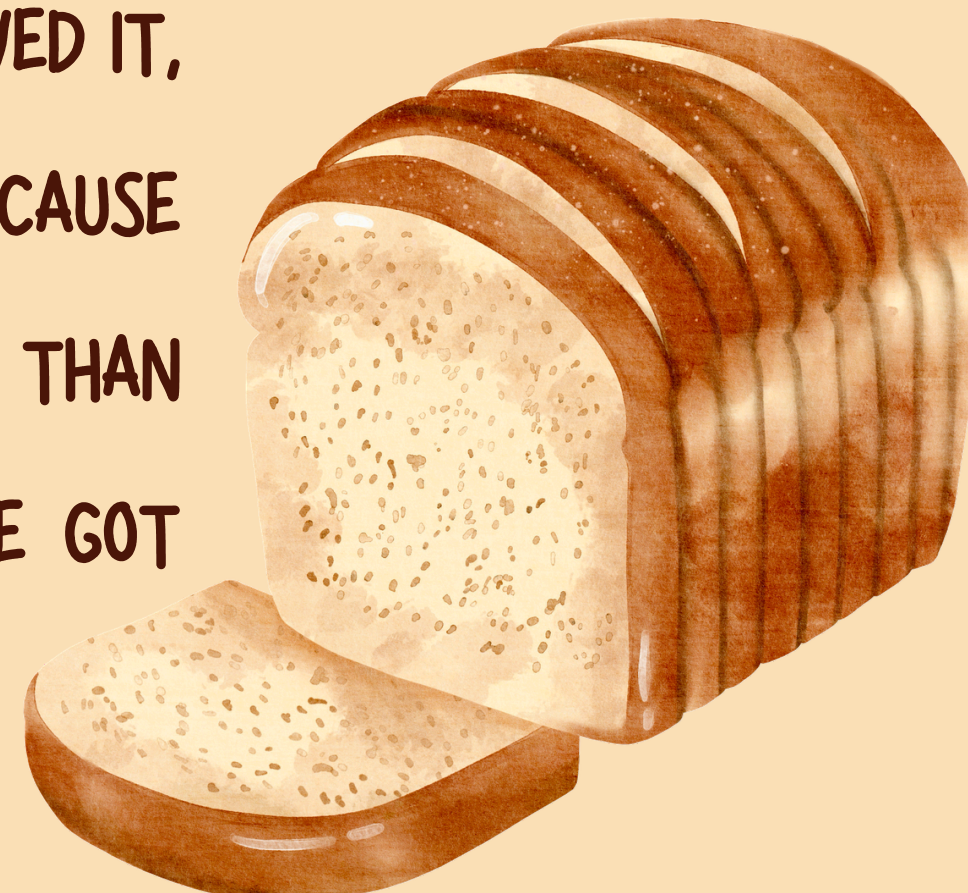

And then came FIFA, which completely destroyed whatever remained of our concept of time. Sunday became a school day. Monday became Sunday. Sleep became optional. Somehow, the entire school was awake at 4 a.m. watching matches with the kind of dedication we rarely show towards actual classes.

Between the mangoes, hockey victories, questionable footwear, midnight matches and increasingly ridiculous inside jokes, the camp turned out to be far more eventful than anyone had signed up for.

We came back with better friendships, better stories, significantly worse sleep schedules and, most importantly, enough material to fill an entire edition of Ink & Intrigue.

REVAMMED RECIPE

STEP 1: SPORTS CAMP STUDENTS TESTED IT, SURVIVED IT,
AND WOULD STILL QUEUE UP FOR IT AGAIN—BECAUSE TRUST ME, NOTHING LOOKS MORE TEMPTING THAN SOMETHING SWEET AFTER ALL THE SWEAT YOU'VE GOT TO WIPE.

STEP 2: WAIT IN THE LINE OF HEAVEN FOR THAT TOASTED BREAD,
THE ONE EVERYONE IS SECRETLY WAITING FOR.

STEP 3: ADD SOME BUTTER (YEAH, STEAL IT
FROM THE PERSON SITTING NEXT TO YOU),
THEN BRING IN THE HERO AND THE VILLAIN
—BANANA AND SUGAR. DON'T LET YOUR COACH SEE THE SUGAR ARMY.

STEP 4: AND GUYS, COME ON, BANANA AIN'T THAT BAD.
STOP THE PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN AND GO SCOOP THIS LITTLE SNEAKY HEAVEN
